

In November 2009 I co-conducted a series of workshops titled "Questioning in a community of inquiry" for undergraduate and doctoral students at the University of the Aegean, along with my colleagues Daniella Camhy, Elena Theodoropoulou and Ann Margaret Sharp.

These workshops were conducted within the frame of the International Conference "Philosophy, philosophy are you there? Doing philosophy with Children," under the auspices of Greek Committee of UNESCO, held in Rhodes, Greece November 28, 2008.

The purpose of these workshops included:

- To help participants understand the aims and benefits of engaging precollege students in philosophical work in the classroom
- To initiate participants in the method of philosophical questioning and of questioning in the frame of a community of inquiry
- To help participants distinguish what kinds of questions and dialogues can be characterized as philosophical;
- To help give participants practice in philosophical reasoning and the experience of philosophical wonder.
